

After a Winter of Blockades

Updates on criminal charges from #ShutDownCanada

There are currently at least 60 people still facing serious criminal charges from the raids on Wet'suwet'en territory and the solidarity movement.

As people move through the justice system, displays of solidarity and practical support make a real difference in the outcome.

We need to show that those who are brave and take risks will be supported if we want to be brave together again in the future and see our movements grow.
